Strategy Package
14-day engagement

CONTEXT

The market-entry playbook: where to play, how to win, and the first twelve months. A redacted excerpt built from public data; no confidential information.

IN THIS REPORT

01	What the package contains	Ten sections, from recommendation to 12-month plan.
02	Positioning and white space	The unredacted map and the quadrant no incumbent owns.
03	Partnership targets	A redacted, ranked list showing structure only.
	Bottom line	The clinical-grade, OTC, software-led quadrant is unclaimed because incumbents would cannibalize prescription revenue to enter it. That makes it defensible.

SAMPLE

ZKK Consulting

1. What the full package contains

A complete, decision-ready market-entry strategy, delivered as a single engagement.

The Strategy Package is the full market-entry playbook: where to play, how to win, and exactly what to do in the first twelve months. This excerpt shows the structure of the deliverable plus one unredacted analysis (the competitive positioning map) and one redacted teaser of the partnership-target work.

Table 1. Contents of the full Strategy Package

#	Section	What it covers
1	Executive summary and strategic recommendation	The single recommended entry path, the rationale, and the decision in one page.
2	Market sizing and segmentation	TAM/SAM by segment, updated and stress-tested from the Market Report.
3	Competitive landscape and white-space analysis	Positioning map, head-to-head feature read, and the specific gaps worth attacking.
4	Regulatory strategy	Pathway selection, predicate strategy, and FDA pre-submission (Q-Sub) guidance.
5	Reimbursement and market access roadmap	Coding, coverage sequencing, and the DME-vs-pharmacy channel decision.
6	Go-to-market recommendations	Channel strategy, launch sequencing, and pricing architecture across tiers.
7	Positioning and messaging framework	Segment-by-segment value propositions and proof points. (Excerpt follows in Section 2.)
8	Partnership and acquisition targets	Ranked target list with strategic-fit scoring and rationale. (Teaser follows in Section 3.)
9	12-month action plan	Sequenced milestones, owners, and decision gates across the first year.
10	Appendices	Interview notes, full data tables, and a complete source library.

2. Positioning and white-space analysis

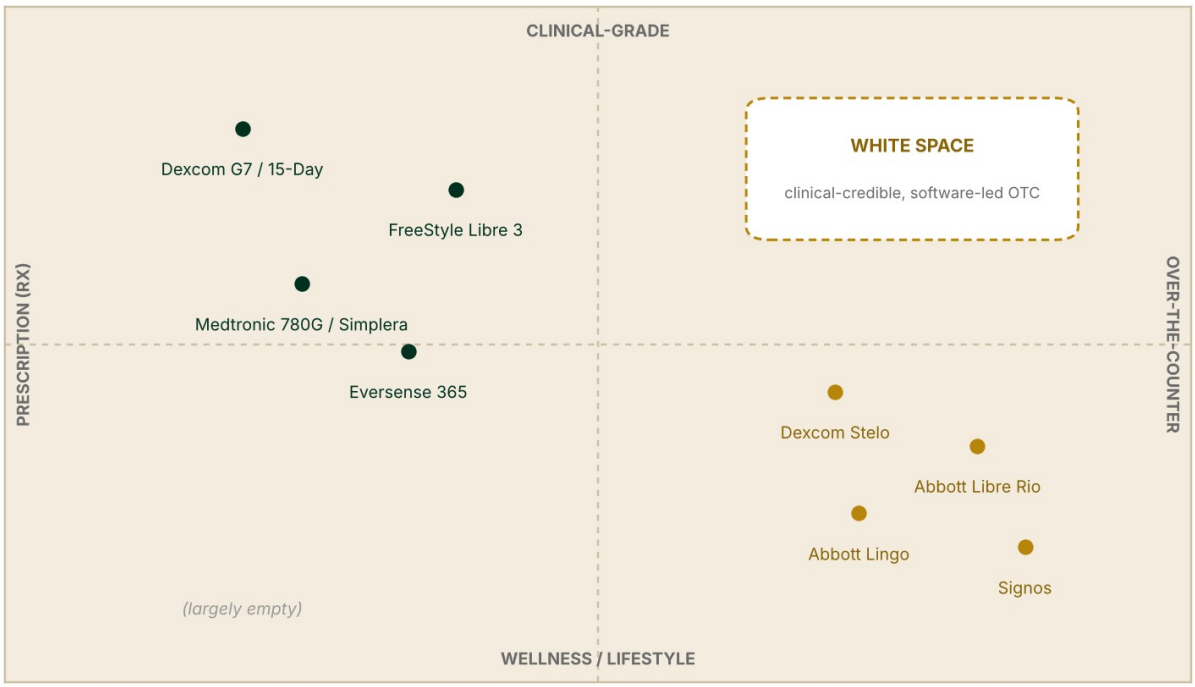

Where every major product sits today, and the one quadrant no incumbent owns.

Excerpt from Section 7 of the full package, shown unredacted.

Mapping the market on the two axes that actually govern buying behavior (clinical positioning, from clinical-grade to wellness, and access model, from prescription to over-the-counter) reveals a crowded upper-left and a wide-open upper-right.

2.1 What the map shows

The upper-left is saturated: Dexcom, Abbott, Medtronic, and Senseonics all compete as clinical-grade prescription devices, differentiated only at the margin (accuracy, wear time, AID integration). The lower-right is filling fast with wellness OTC entrants (Lingo, Signos) competing on app experience and price. The two leaders' own OTC products (Stelo, Libre Rio) sit in the middle: accurate, but deliberately positioned as light "metabolic awareness" tools rather than clinical devices, to avoid cannibalizing their prescription lines.

That leaves the upper-right quadrant largely unclaimed: a product that delivers clinical-grade credibility through an OTC / consumer access model, wrapped in a software layer that turns data into decisions for the non-insulin Type 2 buyer. No incumbent occupies it cleanly because doing so threatens their existing prescription economics, which is precisely why it is defensible for a focused new entrant. The full package develops the specific product, pricing, and messaging to own this position (Section 6) and the segment-level value propositions that support it.

3. Partnership and acquisition targets

The full package ranks twelve targets by strategic fit; five rows are shown with names and rationale redacted.

Excerpt from Section 8 of the full package, redacted. Each target is scored on a weighted strategic-fit model (capability gap closed, speed-to-market, deal feasibility, and defensibility). The scoring framework and target categories are shown; the specific companies and the rationale are redacted, because that analysis is the client-specific core of the engagement.

Table 2. Ranked targets (5 of 12 shown)

Rank	Target	Type	Strategic fit	Rationale
1	[redacted]	Software / AI coaching	9.4 / 10	[redacted]
2	[redacted]	Sensor technology	9.1 / 10	[redacted]
3	[redacted]	Distribution / retail	8.7 / 10	[redacted]
4	[redacted]	Payer / PBM	8.3 / 10	[redacted]
5	[redacted]	AID / insulin delivery	7.9 / 10	[redacted]

Source: ZKK Consulting. Strategic-fit scores are illustrative placeholders in this sample. Redacted blocks mark client deliverable content. Showing 5 of 12 ranked targets.

The full section pairs each target with a recommended deal structure (partnership, licensing, or acquisition), an estimated effort/cost band, and the single capability it unlocks, turning a list of names into a sequenced corporate-development plan tied to the 12-month action plan in Section 9.
